In sports of combat, a submission; a strategy important used in fights of contact total, like MMA (Mixed Jiu Jitsu) opponent, with the objective of forcing the opponent to surrender, using different forms of pressure or immobilization. This is done in the body or in the whole body.

Utilization of submission in MMA
A technical submission is used in MMA when a fighter is in a position inferior to the opponent and is ready to be immobilized. In this case, a submission helps the fighter to dominate the position, neutralize and immobilize the opponent. This is normally done with pressure or points of the joints, causing limits to the movement.

Types of submission permitted and not permitted
In MMA, the rules vary slightly depending on the regulator, but a submission permits the use of chokeholds and joint locks and any form of damage or injury to the opponent. However, they are not permitted elbow strikes, head strikes or any other form of damage or injury. Referees require that an athlete verbally or show a clear sign of incapacity to continue the fight, becoming the winner automatically.
